The people in the hotel believed that the road across the forest was very dangerous. That is why I decided to change my plan and take the road along the river. The man in charge of the hotel advised me not to go on the journey. As it was getting dark, I spent the night there and left the hotel early in the morning. Just outside the town, an old man stopped me and wanted me to take him to a village about seventy miles away. Remembering the advice of the hotel manager, I got very happy and let the old man get on. He was very sad and had old and dirty clothes on. He began to tell me what had happened to him. As he said, he had lost his whole family in a terrible accident.
